This school, commenced nearly ten year-age by lattes and greattenen who had seen the sick suffer for want of proper care, and who desired, as much as possible, to alleviate the sufferings of humanity, is one of those which has attained considerable prominence among the leatitudions of Wash-lagton. Through Miss Clara Barton, the great representative of the Red Gress, an areal representative of the Red Grass, as devitation was extended to the nurses of the Training School to assist at the hos-pital service during the recent National Drill. This was no small compliant, but one well deserved by those who are training themselves for a life's work of alleviating the sufferings of distressed humanity. That here in the Capital city of the nation a school such as this is a necessity, no one still gainesy.

The tuition is entirely free, the faculty give their services gratuitously and the pupils are fitting themselves for positions which are now too often illied by those utterly incompetent. The school has thus far been sustained by contributions, but these have not been sufficient to give it the scope or strength which it so freinly descrive. Under these circumstances, is in not incumbert upon all to give it the support of warm hearts and free hands in its laudable work? There should be sufficient outdowment to aid its pupils in their necessary expenses, for many have nothing with which to defray them during the time they are devoting to this work and the hands of the pupils and those who have charge should be strengthened by expressions of good will and encouragement from those who free that they are doing a needful work.

Let us hope that the time is not far distant when the Training School for Nurses may be placed in a position where it will be an assured factor in the alleviation of human suffering and where it can do much greater good than it has in the past, because it has such greatly increased facilities. All contributions for the benefit of the institution will be received by Dr. G. B. Pool of No. 945 Rhools Island avenue northwest, and will be applied to the best good of the school.
